The main reason I started on medium.com is that we get variety in what George Washington called “parties.” I became convinced based on cognitive neuroscience documented in my 2018 theory of human privacy book and 2019 theory of human lying book that dialogue not fiat (one way) speech is existentially essential to human society.

George Washington’s last farewell is all about this too. I did not know about the helena.org project but I recommend anyone to their executive summary of a few days ago to see the effect of person to person dialogue on social existence.

I knew they would find what they did because of the cognitive science of privacy and lies, but it is nice to see a clean contemporaneous proof. The lies book and the following free link Medium article that summarizes it proposes another way to have the dialogue but on a global basis: what I call the Internet Court of Lies.

So thank all of us for engaging on active dialogue on the question of whether Trump will succeed in becoming dictator for life.

Personally, I would like to find a historian who has studied how duly elected leaders achieve total dictatorship. Burning down the Reichstag worked for one. It would be nice to have fifty examples studied, and their progressions compared and contrasted. I doubt if I would see much about crowds working one way or another.

George Washington has come as close as I have seen to a more studious understanding of how dictatorships evolve, as Trump continues to develop his dictatorship.

Washington, like helena.org, and myself, probably all independently believe enforced open moderated dialogue is the only way. A Court, by the way, is exactly that for resolving human disagreements. My view came out of the science, Washington's from history, and helena's from probably a dozen other places.

That is my input on this wonderful dialogue.

Here is my summary of George Washington's last farewell, in his own words, but edited to be easier to read in contemporary English. Also a free link.
