Every Politician Is a Lying MF
Dweebs and Dogs

889 24

An Unavoidable Secret © 2007 Robert Thibadeau, All Rights Reserved.

There is no Whole Truth

Scientifically Impossible

Robert Thibadeau
Nov 29 · 2 min read

The truth about lies is that every sentence can be a lie.

The science says that truth is completely unique to every human being. Our truth is what our individual episodic memory says it is. No two people share exactly the memories organized in exactly the same way.

There is no way possible to “tell the truth” where you can be certain that everybody will believe it is true, and not a lie. Not Possible.

You should be saying that no politician should poison dialogue. The only way people can agree to truth is with person-to-person dialogue.

This article is a great demonstration of how anybody can claim a lie as not the whole truth and know they are right. What you have to understand is that mankind has long, in fact the evidence says forever, lied in ways people find socially acceptable. It’s called “Fiction.” You mention another one in your article when you say that politicians can lie in acceptable ways.

Since EVERYBODY INESCAPABLY LIES ALL THE TIME, the key is to lie in socially acceptable ways and be open to dialogue about whether you are lying in a socially unacceptable way or not.

This is covered in my book “How to Get Your (good) Lies Back: The Internet Court of Lies. It is why only court enforced moderated dialogue can resolve how a fiat lie (a suspected lie) appears to others.

Short version of the book:

Fiat Lies are Genocide on the Human Race

The Internet Court of Lies

medium.com

Here is a deep dive on the science:

Lies in the Intermodal Brain

The Majesty of Neocortical Intellect

medium.com

)

Internet Court Of Lies Lies Internet Of Truth Politics Trump

About Help Legal